

Amendments on Focusing our Economic Justice work

From Duane Campbell:

Add the words in bold to the paragraph:

For the next two years, DSA at the national and local level, in tandem with our campus organization, Young Democratic Socialists, will endeavor to develop relevant, specific campaigns and actions that will move our economic justice perspective into mainstream electoral and policy debate, as well as inform the work of social movements which we work in, ranging from immigrant rights and labor rights about the struggle for truly universal national health care and other universal programs. As much as politics is about mobilizing and achieving concrete gains, it is also a war of ideas, and the social movements can only benefit from adopting and internalizing a democratic socialist perspective on the economy.

From Mike Hirsch:

Reword Duane's amendment so the paragraph reads:

For the next two years, DSA at the national and local level, in tandem with our campus organization, Young Democratic Socialists, will endeavor to develop relevant, specific campaigns and actions that will move our economic justice perspective into mainstream electoral and policy debate, as well as inform the work of those social movements that we support and help build, ranging from immigrant rights and labor rights about the struggle for truly universal national health care and other universal programs. As much as politics is about mobilizing and achieving concrete gains, it is also a war of ideas, and the social movements can only benefit from adopting and internalizing a democratic socialist perspective on the economy.